Towards a Church Architecture

edited by Peter Hammond

The Architectural Press, 9-13 Queen Anne's Gate, London S.W.1

Few new churches are truly modern—as opposed to gimmick-modern—because a proper understanding between architect and client is rare in a church brief. This co-operative study by architects and clergy aims to do for churches what has already been done for many other types of building. It is a book for both architects and churchmen because it strives to draw them together: to explain to churchmen the inward approach of the genuine modern architect, and to impart to architects the essential purpose and meaning of the buildings they are projecting.

The first results of this regeneration of church architecture appear in the illustrations, and in two sets of basic principles for design, drawn up in Germany and America respectively.

Glass in Architecture and decoration

The Architectural Press, 9 Queen Anne's Gate, SW1

This is a well-documented, authoritative and up-to-date reference book for architects: it is also a commentary on design approached through a material which has profoundly influenced the development of architecture. The first section deals with the manufacture of glasses used in building. The second section deals with the application of glass to buildings, the third with decoration. The fourth is a technical section dealing with the nature and properties of glass. The final section is devoted to the practical problems of working, glazing and fixing glass, and an Appendix describes nearly all the British glasses manufactured for building.
